

Why are my tax dollars supporting an industry using an outdated business model? Most American businesses are expected to meet the evolving market conditions and challenges without the benefit of legislation to remove competitors.

Auto and plane manufacturers integrate new technologies, practices, and components into the way they do business every year. Why are you permitting the video and sound copyright holders to reap great profits without having to integrate advancing technology?

Attempts to legislate away the benefits of technology have a long track record of failure; the automobile, the in-car radio, the cell phone.

I know the film and video industry's campaign contributions are hard to resist, but I implore you to confirm your belief in the American tradition of innovation and the free market society. Restrictive legislation is not the American way.
